EDUCATION

- Dartmouth College, Hanover, NH
PhD., Experimental Social Psychology, November, 2002.
- University of Virginia, Charlottesville, VA
B.A., Psychology, May 1994.

ACADEMIC POSITIONS

- The Pennsylvania State University, Assistant Professor of Psychology, 2006-present
- Harvard & Tufts Universities, Post-Doctoral Research Fellow, 2002-2006
- University of Virginia, Post-Graduate Research Fellow, 1996-1998

HONORS AND AWARDS

- SAGE Young Scholar Award, Foundation for Social and Personality Psychology and SAGE Publications, 2009
- Professor of the Year, Psi Chi National Honors Society, Department of Psychology, Penn State University, 2008
- Derek Bok Certificate of Distinction for Teaching, Department of Psychology, Harvard University, 2004
- James McKeen Cattell Dissertation Award, Finalist, New York Academy of Sciences, 2004
- Marie Center Award for Excellence in Graduate Research, Department of Psychological & Brain Sciences, Dartmouth College, 2002
- Graduate Research Fellowship, Honorable Mention, National Science Foundation, 1998
- Graduate of High Distinction, School of Arts & Sciences, University of Virginia, 1994
- Annual Undergraduate Research Award, Arts & Sciences, University of Virginia, 1994

FELLOWSHIPS AND GRANTS

- National Institute of Aging (New Investigator, # 1 R01 AG035028-01). A wrinkle in time: The perception of expressions in the elderly. Principal Investigator (Multiple PI), 2011-2014.
- National Science Foundation (SoCS): Studying the computability of emotions by harnessing massive data sets. Co-Principal Investigator, under review.
- National Science Foundation Grant (Award #0544533). The functional equivalence of morphological and expressive cues of dominance and affiliation. Co-Principal Investigator. 2006-2010.
- Social Science Research Institute (Penn State). Black and blue: Negotiating stereotype threat and racial discrimination in policing contexts. Collaborating Investigator, 8/2007-11/2008.
- National Institute of Mental Health, National Research Service Award, Post-Doctoral Fellowship, (Award #1F32MH067294-01). Effect of perceived gaze direction on emotion Processing. Principal Investigator, 2002-2005.
- National Science Foundation, Doctoral Dissertation Improvement Grant (Award #0121947). Gaze direction and facial affect: An fMRI investigation. Principal Investigator, 2001-2002.
- Presidential Fellowship, Department of Psychological & Brain Sciences, Dartmouth College, 1998.

COURSES TAUGHT

Good Science Good Practice (Graduate: Professional Development): Department of Psychology, Harvard University, Fall, 2003 & Spring, 2004.

Description: This course was designed to offer an informal forum for graduate students to explore issues relevant to their career development. Topics included: How to seek and obtain funding, authorship dilemmas, and the job search. In addition, a co-instructor and I organized a speaker series entitled “From Data to Theory and Back Again,” where research psychologists shared their perspectives and personal stories on how they developed theories throughout their careers.

Advanced Social Psychology at Face Value (Undergraduate): Department of Psychology, Tufts University, Fall, 2003

Description: The human face is arguably the most richly informative and pervasive social stimulus we are likely to encounter. Research on the human face therefore offered a central theme from which to explore topics of broad relevance to social psychological inquiry. Topics included sex and racial stereotyping, social ecology, attraction, Theory of Mind, social contagion, and emotion theory.

The Laughing Animal (Undergraduate and graduate): Department of Psychology, Tufts University, Summer 2004; 2005; The Pennsylvania State University, Spring, 2007.

Description: Humor and laughter are vital to human functioning, promoting physical and emotional well-being, social harmony, learning, and creativity. This course was designed to explore the origins of this uniquely human phenomenon from a phylogenic and ontogenetic perspective, and to apply insights gained to broader research themes such as creativity, attribution theories, and emotion theories.

The Psychology of Human Emotion (Undergraduate): Department of Psychology, The Pennsylvania State University, Spring, 2006; Fall, 2006; Fall, 2007; Spring, 2009; Spring 2010.

Description: There is hardly a waking moment during which any of us could truly be described as completely devoid of emotion. Throughout this course we explore both historical and contemporary perspectives on emotion, first introducing four classic approaches to understanding emotion, then examining empirical work on the expression of emotion, the neural architecture underlying emotion, individual differences in emotional experience and perception, and emotion management in everyday life.

Social Affective Neuroscience (Graduate): Department of Psychology, The Pennsylvania State University, Spring, 2007, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2011.

Description: Social affective neuroscience bridges the areas of social psychology, emotion, cognition, and neuroscience. Insights are additionally drawn from work more broadly interdisciplinary in which these parent disciplines naturally merge, including cultural anthropology, evolutionary psychology, ethology, developmental psychology, and comparative psychology. The goal of this course is to appeal to both the student who wants to be a consumer of the neuroscience literature in order to apply it to their subject area without necessarily conducting it, as well as to the student who wants to study neuroscience while drawing from related disciplines.

Social Vision (Undergraduate): Department of Psychology, The Pennsylvania State University, Fall, 2007, Spring 2011.

Description: Human beings possess an elaborate visual system of nonverbal communication and perception. This course examines four themes related to this extraordinary ability by examining research positioned at the social psychological and visual science interface including how: 1) vision plays a powerful role in moderating social interaction and perception; 2) visual cues serve as the perceptual determinants of social group category and stereotype activation; 3) social factors play an important role in moderating basic visual processing; 4) visual and social perception are in some cases functionally equivalent to one another, where the study of one is essentially the study of the other.
